till recently dialogues and exchanges on strategic questions had unfortunately been an exclusive western monopoly the perceptions of our scholars journalists and others tended to be influenced largely by the vast quantities of literature produced by western strategic sources academicians from the non aligned world very often met each other in conferences organized under western auspices there are very few fields in which our academic dependence has been as great as in the field of strategic studies this seminar represents a significant departure from this pattern it affords an opportunity for the two non aligned friendly neighbours to get together to discuss our respective strategic perceptions to establish direct contacts and communications between our institutions and scholars and to improve and reinforce our mutual understanding free from the distorting influence of foreign scholars viewed in this perspective the significance of this seminar goes far beyond this immediate occasion indonesia has developed the concept of national resilience in india we have a philosophy of self reliance both these approaches require that on strategic and international security issues we should develop our own independent perceptions unfettered by the biased strategic doctrines of western scholars this was in fact to some extent the position in the first decade of non alignment when both our countries rejected the concept of a rigid bipolar world though our perceptions at that stage were derived more from certain philosophical formulations rather than from a detailed analysis of strategic factors which affected our security today it is obvious that such an approach is grossly inadequate it is necessary for us to independently compile relevant factual data analyse them critically and derive our own conclusions it is on the basis of these independent conclusions that our own national strategies have to be formulated institutions like the centre for strategic and international studies and the institute for defence studies and analyses play a very useful role in developing such national perceptions interactions between such institutions are bound to reflect in due course at national levels operating performance of a firm is dependent on many factors of which foreign investment today is considered a highly crucial one this is more so in a developing open economy like india where domestic capital base for targeted growth is relatively weak evidences of relationship between foreign investment and firm level performance and the degree of influence of the former on the later have been argued through many research studies so far however there still appears a gap filling scope with special reference to the impact of foreign investment on the operating performance at the firm level in india the present paper addresses this important issue with a view to providing further empirical evidence taking the case of two major indian companies from the bse 30 group i.e reliance industries ltd and tata steel ltd the paper evaluates the magnitude of influence of inward foreign investment on their operating performance using multiple regression technique the paper first estimates the relative effect of foreign investment on both the companies operating performance and then attempts to examine whether the presence of foreign investment strengthens the operating performance of said firms it is found that the influence of foreign investment has been quite significant on operating performance in both the firms

spencer bower reliance based estoppel previously titled estoppel by representation is the highly regarded and long established textbook on the doctrines of reliance based estoppel by which a party is prevented from changing his position if he has induced another to rely on it such that the other will suffer by that change since the fourth edition in 2003 the house of lords has decided two proprietary estoppel cases cobbe v yeoman s row property management ltd and thorne v major whose combined effect is identified as helping to define a criterion for a reliance based estoppel founded on a representation namely that the party estopped actually intends the estoppel raiser to act in reliance on the representation or is reasonably understood to intend him so to act other developments in the doctrine of proprietary estoppel have required a complete revision of the related chapter chapter 12 in this edition thorne v major confirms too the submission in the fourth edition that unequivocality is a requirement for any reliance based estoppel founded on a representation other views expressed in the fourth edition are also noted to have been upheld such as the recognition that an estoppel may be founded on a representation of law briggs v gleeds that a party may preclude itself from denying a proposition by contract as well as another s reliance peekay intermark ltd v australia and new zealand banking group ltd and springwell navigation corp v jp morgan chase bank and that an estoppel by deed binds by agreement or declaration under seal rather than by reason of reliance prime sight ltd v lavarello with the adjustment reflected in the change of title and distinguishing the foundation of estoppels that bind by deed and by contract the editors adopt spencer bower s unificatory project by the identification of the reliance based estoppels as aspects of a single principle preventing a change of position that would be unfair by reason of responsibility for prejudicial reliance from this follow the views that reliance based estoppels have common requirements of responsibility causation and prejudice that estoppel by representation of fact is like the other reliance based estoppels a rule of law that the result of estoppel by representation of fact may accordingly be mitigated on equitable grounds to avoid injustice that the result of an estoppel by convention depends on whether its subject matter is factual promissory or proprietary that a reliance based estoppel other than a proprietary estoppel which uniquely generates a cause of action may be deployed to complete a cause of action where absent the estoppel a cause of action would not lie unless it would unacceptably subvert a rule of law in particular the doctrine of consideration that an estoppel as to a right in or over property generates a discretionary remedy and that the prohibition on the deployment of a promissory estoppel as a sword should be understood as an application of the defence of illegality viz that an estoppel may not unacceptably subvert a statute or rule of law

Emerson and Self-reliance 2002

For if legal history is written and taught merely to add further justification for currently accepted notions it becomes a mundane sterile activity but if it is used to reveal the alternative structures and ideas that are possible it can assist in breaking down the restrictive artificial barriers which every legal system tends to develop. I do not see the legal historian as subversive in my edited essays on the history of law 1989-19 we cannot and need not abolish or reinvent legal history but we can and have to reinvent our legal tradition as a way of observing and describing the law and the history of law. A.J. van der Walt, legal history, legal culture and transformation in a constitutional democracy 2006. Fundamina 46. The University of Pretoria celebrated its 100th birthday during 2008. The year was marked by several celebratory events amongst others the creation of a centenary rose, an attempt to have a centenary flame burning at the main entrance of the university and a centenary ball in the sports arena. Closer to the ideal and functions of the university there were also a prestige lecture series and a book fair displaying the latest theory, art and even children's books to members of the university and the public. For legal scholars, history at all levels, a history of ideas, social and political history and also the history of law lies at the heart of our teaching and research. We were lucky enough to catch a 1st rated academic and holder of the South African Research Chair in Property at the University of Stellenbosch, André van der Walt, during a visit to the faculty for the annual Property Law Conference to present some of his reflections on history and particularly legal history. Lize Kriel from the University of Pretoria's Department of Historical and Heritage Studies acted as respondent. Van der Walt's paper and Kriel's response have been taken up in this edition of Pulp Fictions. As always we hope that the thoughts expressed here will inspire and open more space and time for further reflection.

Self-reliance and the Building of an Independent Economy 1965

This open access book sets out to explain the reasons for the gap between knowing and doing in view of self-reliance which is more and more often expected of citizens in today's society. People are expected to take responsibility for their own lives and be self-reliant. This is no easy feat; they must be on constant high alert in areas of life such as health, work and personal finances and if things threaten to go awry, take appropriate action without further ado. What does this mean for public policy? Policymakers tend to assume that the government only needs to provide people with clear information and that once properly informed they will automatically do the right thing. However, it is becoming increasingly obvious that things do not work like that. Even though people know perfectly well what they ought to do, they often behave differently. Why is this? This book sets out to explain the reasons for the gap between knowing and doing. It focuses on the role of non-cognitive capacities such as setting goals, taking action, persevering and coping with setbacks and shows how these capacities are undermined by adverse circumstances. By taking the latest psychological insights fully into account, this book presents a more realistic perspective on self-reliance and shows government officials how to design rules and institutions that allow for the natural limitations in people's capacity to act.
