as skinner argued so pointedly the more we know about the situational causes of psychological phenomena the less need we have for postulating internal conscious mediating processes to explain those phenomena now as the purview of social psychology is precisely to discover those situational causes of thinking feeling and acting in the real or implied presence of other people it is hard to escape the forecast that as knowledge progresses regarding social psychological phenomena there will be less of a role played by free will or conscious choice in accounting for them in other words because of social psychology s natural focus on the situational determinants of thinking feeling and doing it is inevitable that social psychological phenomena increasingly will be found to be automatic in nature this 10th book in the series addresses automaticity and how it relates to social behavior the lead article written by john bargh argues that social psychology phenomena are essentially automatic in nature as opposed to being mediated by conscious choice or reflection bargh maintains that an automatic mental phenomenon is that which occurs reflexively whenever certain triggering conditions are in place when those conditions are present the process runs off autonomously independently of conscious guidance in his lead article he focuses on these preconscious automatic processes that can be contrasted with postconscious and goal dependent forms of automaticity which depend on more than the mere presence of environmental objects or events because social psychology like automaticity theory and research is also largely concerned with phenomena that occur whenever certain situational features or factors are in place social psychology phenomena are essentially automatic students and researchers in social and cognitive psychology will find this to be a provocative addition to the series

The Magic of Everyday Life The Fascinating Application of Hermetic Principles A Deeper Look Beyond the Known 2023-06-18 the power of music to influence mood create scenes routines and occasions is widely recognised and this is reflected in a strand of social theory from plato to adorno that portrays music as an influence on character social structure and action there have however been few attempts to specify this power empirically and to provide theoretically grounded accounts of music s structuring properties in everyday experience music in everyday life uses a series of ethnographic studies an aerobics class karaoke evenings music therapy sessions and the use of background music in the retail sector as well as in depth interviews to show how music is a constitutive feature of human agency drawing together concepts from psychology sociology and socio linguistics it develops a theory of music s active role in the construction of personal and social life and highlights the aesthetic dimension of social order and organisation in late modern societies
